PI #21.01 AdventSource Report

Brad Forbes reported.

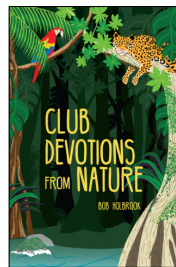

The new Leaders pack is scheduled to be in stock in August of 2021. It will include:

- Club Handbook
- Uniform Guide
- Honors Guide
- Drill & Marching Guide

At this time, it will not include Investiture Achievement materials as they may change next year when the GC Youth Department issues its new outline next year.

The AYMT Presenter and Participant Guides are available in English and Spanish, with French coming soon.

Bob Holbrook was written a devotional book about nature honors. It will be available in July of 2021.

A new Pathfinder Bible is now available. It is New King James Version with large print, red letters for Jesus' words, 10 color maps for easy visualization of key Bible places, Pathfinder Pledge, Law and Song, and Investiture Achievement requirements for each level.

On the AdventSource website, there is now a tab to take you directly to all Pathfinder items.

PA 2021.05 New Honors

PI #21.05 Honors Report: Teaching Statement

Last year the Advisory recommended to the Executive Committee the adoption of a Teaching Statement. The Executive Committee returned the document to the Honors Task Force with some concerns and questions. The Task Force altered the document and will resubmit it to the Executive Committee.

Statement of Teaching AY Honors

Since the inception of the Pathfinder Ministry, honors have had a central role in the development of young men and women for Christ. The purpose of earning honors is to introduce young people to vocations, interests, or hobbies that would provide productive life skills. Another purpose is to create a bond between the Pathfinder and their instructors, as they are mentored in these new skills; this bond would not only bind individuals but would also bind our young people to their local church family and to Christ.

It is the North American Division’s goal that these two purposes be honored as we continue to develop and adapt Pathfinder Ministry to prepare for the next generation of young people to join Pathfinders.

During this last generation a new trend in honors has emerged; the unstated goal by many Pathfinders, or the adults in their lives, to amass the largest number of honors possible. At many events, honors are being taught to mass groups and/or in time slots that afford the Pathfinder neither an opportunity for internalizing the information presented nor interaction with the instructor. Thus, these honor sessions, when treated in isolation, fail to provide the opportunity for either of the purposes of earning an honor.

At times, organizations have even turned to providing poster honors to allow the young person to walk through a space, record a few pieces of information on a page and be rewarded with a patch. This might be a useful first step in ingesting the basic knowledge to eventually learn a skill, though educators will verify that this methodology alone is insufficient for a young person to truly learn and internalize the information.

Emerging technologies and the recent global pandemic have in fact allowed technology and its accompanying slides-based teaching of honors to be a two-edged sword. For some it has allowed kids to “earn” honors without meeting the goals of AY honors as stated above (to their loss and ours). However, more positively, for others it has been a lifeblood for keeping club ministries going even though not meeting in person.

When professionals in group situations are offering training to our Pathfinders it is essential that in order to meet both stated goals, each counselor or supervising staff member must work all the harder to follow-up, providing the mentoring resources for true knowledge attainment. Each must make sure that all honor requirements are fully met, and we must be sure that the Pathfinder has truly completed all requirements in order to achieve true learning.

Guidance for all instructors preparing to teach AY honors:

First, Adventist Youth (AY) honors are an intrinsic component of the Pathfinder Ministry in leading young people to Christ, and as such, should not be rushed. If an honor cannot be taught in the time allocated, it should not be taught, unless there is a schedule for completion, or a stated plan clearly communicated to local staff/ counselors for achieving the remaining requirements during other times – before being given a patch.

Second, the requirements of an honor are designed to inspire multiple levels of learning to internalize information. Instructors must become proficient with the content of the AY Honor requirements, its layout, and structure, in addition to the materials that are required to instruct the honor appropriately. For an honor to be duly earned, all requirements must be fulfilled. The Honors Wiki is the North American Division's resource to provide content, structure, tutorials, lesson plans, answer keys, and more to assist the instructor in achieving all the purposes of AY Honors.

Third, honors may age due to changing technologies and learning trends. Instructors who have recommendations or changes to certain requirements are invited to submit them to their local Conference Youth/ Pathfinder Ministries Department and/or the North American Division AY Honors Task Force.

Finally, we ask that instructors take the time necessary with each Pathfinder to create a bond with their students; true success in the Pathfinder Ministry is measured in the bonds that are created between the young person and members of their church family, and through these bonds to an ultimate relationship with Jesus Christ.

Comments from the floor...

- I like the document. I am concerned about the paragraph about connecting the kid to the adult without mentioning the further connection to God.

- Will there be a time frame for teaching honors according to level?
- Will there be examples to modify honors for pathfinders with learning disabilities
- It seems as though a discussion for another day would be how is this philosophy implemented in events that are not sponsored by the local conference?
- So who gets to police this?
